IN THE ARIZONA SUPREME COURT

In the Matter of:

PETITION TO AMEND
ETHICAL RULE 1.2, RULE 42,
ARIZ. R. SUP. CT.

Supreme Court No. R-16-_____

Petition to Amend ER 1.2, Rule 42,
Ariz. R. Sup. Ct.

Pursuant to Rule 28, Ariz. R. Sup. Ct., the undersigned respectfully petitions this Court to amend Ethical Rule (ER) 1.2, Rule 42, Ariz. R. Sup. Ct., to address Arizona lawyers' ability to counsel and assist clients in legal matters expressly permissible under state law, despite the fact that the same conduct may violate applicable federal criminal law. The proposed amendment is intended to resolve the "ethical conundrum" for lawyers that arises due to the legalization of medical marijuana.

I. Background and Purpose of Proposed Rule Amendment

In the 2010 general election, Arizona voters approved the Arizona Medical Marijuana Act, which legalized medical marijuana for use by people with certain chronic or debilitating conditions. The federal Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. §841(a)(1), however, continues to make the manufacture, distribution or possession with intent to distribute marijuana illegal.

This conflict has put Arizona lawyers in a tenuous position because existing ER 1.2(d), which is identical to the American Bar Association's Model Rule 1.2(d), specifically bars them from "counsel[ing] a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent" and they only "may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of the law." Comment [10] to ER 1.2 (identical to Model Rule comment [9]) makes clear "that a lawyer is not for hire as an accomplice or enabler of criminal conduct." Ariz. Ethics Op. 11-01 at p. 4 (February 2011) (appended). Strictly applied, this means that by advising and helping clients conduct business under Arizona's medical-marijuana law, lawyers would be engaging in criminal conduct under federal law and thus violating ER 1.2(d).

After Arizona voters approved the medical-marijuana law, the State Bar of Arizona's Committee on the Rules of Professional Conduct attempted to reconcile ER 1.2(d) with the fact that Arizona now allowed Arizonans to engage in conduct that remained illegal under federal law, and issued Ethics Op. 11-01. Noting that clients need legal advice and assistance "to engage in the conduct that the state law expressly permits,” the opinion declined to interpret and apply ER 1.2(d) “in a manner that would prevent a lawyer who concludes that the client’s proposed conduct is in ‘clear and unambiguous compliance’ with state law from assisting the client in connection with activities expressly authorized under state law.”

Faced with the same “ethical conundrum” as well under the same Model Rule 1.2(d) language, the Illinois State Bar Association (ISBA) issued Advisory Opinion No. 14-07 (October 2014) agreeing with Arizona’s Op. 11-01. The ISBA opinion, however, also cogently noted that ethics opinions “do not immunize any lawyer from disciplinary action” and advocated that the Illinois Supreme Court amend its version of Rule 1.2(d), saying:

Given the text of Rule 1.2(d), there is some degree of uncertainty surrounding the duties of an Illinois lawyer when representing a client involved in the medical marijuana business. That uncertainty would be removed if Rule 1.2(d) were to be amended...to account for the unique situation in which the laws of another jurisdiction run counter to those of Illinois.

Since the wave of adoption of state medical-marijuana laws, many affected jurisdictions with Model Rule 1.2(d) language have recognized this “ethical conundrum” in light of their new permissible state laws and have formally changed their professional-conduct codes, thereby removing any uncertainty.

Some states have chosen to add comments to their professional-conduct rules. Colorado added new comment [14] to its Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 1.2, effective March 24, 2014:

A lawyer may counsel a client regarding the validity, scope, and meaning of Colorado constitution article XVIII, secs. 14 & 16, and may assist a client in conduct that the lawyer reasonably believes is permitted by these constitutional provisions and the statutes, regulations, orders, and other state or local provisions implementing them. In these circumstances. the lawyer shall also advise the client regarding related federal law and policy.

Nevada adopted almost identical language – customized with its state laws – as new comment [1] to its Rule 1.2, Nevada Rules of Professional Conduct, effective May 7, 2014. Washington added slightly different language in its comment [18] effective December 9, 2014, to its Rule 1.2, Washington Rules of Professional Conduct:

At least until there is a change in federal enforcement policy, a lawyer may counsel a client regarding the validity, scope and meaning of Washington Initiative 502 (Laws of 2013, ch. 3) and may assist a client in conduct that the lawyer reasonably believes is permitted by this statute and the other statutes, regulations, orders, and other state and local provisions implementing them.

Other states have added marijuana-related-law specific exemptions to their rules. Oregon and Alaska have added very similar subsections that provide exceptions to the Model Rule 1.2(d) language. Effective February 19, 2015, Oregon, which has Model Rule 1.2(d) language as its Rule 1.2(c)¹, added this exemption:

(d) Notwithstanding paragraph (c), a lawyer may counsel and assist a client regarding Oregon’s marijuana-related laws. In the event Oregon law conflicts with federal or tribal law, the lawyer shall also advise the client regarding related federal and tribal law and policy.

Effective June 23, 2015, Alaska added a new subsection (f) to its Rule 1.2, Rules of

Professional Conduct:

A lawyer may counsel a client regarding Alaska's marijuana laws and assist the client to engage in conduct that the lawyer reasonably believes is authorized by those laws. If Alaska law conflicts with federal law, the lawyer shall also advise the client regarding related federal law and policy.

Other states have chosen to add comments or rule exemptions that are not medical-marijuana specific. Connecticut revised its Rule 1.2(d) to permit conduct allowed under state law:

A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, but a lawyer may (1) discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client; (2) ~~and may counsel~~ or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of the law; or (3) counsel or assist a client regarding conduct expressly permitted by Connecticut law, provided that the lawyer counsels the client about the legal consequences, under other applicable law, of the client's proposed course of conduct.

At least one other state has both amended its rule and added a comment. In Illinois, the ISBA advisory opinion cited Connecticut's efforts and recommended that the Illinois Supreme Court Rules Committee promulgate a similar amendment. Illinois not only adopted Connecticut's approach but also added a lengthy comment. Effective January 1, 2016, the Illinois Supreme Court amended its Rule 1.2(d) similar to Connecticut's amendment:

(d) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, but a lawyer may (1) discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client,

(2) and may counsel or assist a client to make a good-faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of the law, and

(3) counsel or assist a client in conduct expressly permitted by Illinois law that may violate or conflict with federal or other law, as long as the lawyer advises the client about that federal or other law and its potential consequences.

It also added a lengthy new comment [10] explaining the rule change:

Paragraph (d)(3) was adopted to address the dilemma facing a lawyer in Illinois after the passage of the Illinois Compassion Use of Medical Cannabis Pilot Program Act effective January 1, 2014. The Act expressly permits the cultivation, distribution, and use of marijuana for medical purposes under the conditions stated in the Act. Conduct permitted by the Act may be prohibited by the federal Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. §§801-904 and other law. The conflict between state and federal law makes it particularly important to allow a lawyer to provide legal advice and assistance to a client seeking to engage in conduct permitted by Illinois law. In providing such advice and assistance, a lawyer shall also advise the client about related federal law and policy. Paragraph (d)(3) is not restricted in its application to the marijuana law conflict. A lawyer should be especially careful about counseling or assisting a client in other contexts that may violate or conflict with federal, state, or local law.

In Arizona, Ethics Op. 11-01 has provided much needed guidance to lawyers.

But in Arizona, as in many other jurisdictions, ethics opinions issued by a State Bar committee – the Committee on the Rules of Professional Conduct, in this state -- are advisory only and not binding on the discipline system. This is true even though the State Bar of Arizona is a mandatory bar to which all licensed members in this jurisdiction must belong, and even though the ethics advisory function coexists in the same organization as the discipline prosecution function. As the ISBA opinion put it, an ethics opinion does not “immunize any lawyer from disciplinary action.”

Allowing the disciplinary agency, rather than the highest court, to adopt a policy also does not provide adequate certainty for lawyers. The governing boards for at least two jurisdictions – Florida and Massachusetts, both of which have Model Rule 1.2(d) language -- have adopted formal written policies in which they state that bar members will not be prosecuted for misconduct if they advise clients under those states’ medical-marijuana laws.² A policy adopted by an entity other than the rule-making court, however, is an inadequate way to resolve the “ethical conundrum” posed by the ER 1.2(d)/Model Rule 1.2(d) dilemma.

To remove the uncertainty, Arizona should follow Connecticut and Illinois and amend its ER 1.2(d) to recognize that there may be times when – as Illinois explained in its comment – “the conflict between state and federal law makes it particularly important to allow a lawyer to provide legal advice and assistance to a client seeking to engage in conduct permitted by [state] law.”

The language adopted by Connecticut and Illinois also importantly incorporates a concept already posited in Ethics Op. 11-01: that lawyers may provide necessary legal help to a client taking permissible acts under Arizona’s medical-marijuana law if they advise the client of the “potential federal law implications and consequences thereof, or, if the lawyer is not qualified to do so, advises the client to seek other legal counsel regarding those issues....” If a lawyer is not competent to provide the counsel required under proposed ER 1.2(d)(3), then ER 1.1 (competence) requires that the lawyer associate a lawyer who has the established competence, and ER 1.2(c) allows the lawyer to limit the scope of representation, with informed client consent.

It also implicitly recognizes that other state-federal conflicts similar to medical marijuana may arise.³ By adopting this change, Arizona would not be an outlier; it would be joining Connecticut and Illinois by resolving a state/federal conflict. While it may be preferable to adhere as closely as possible to the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, medical-marijuana laws have been controversial, state-by-state phenomena unlikely to result in timely changes to a national model rule.

Amending the rule itself also is preferable to simply adding a comment. Comments “explain[] and illustrate[] the meaning and purpose of the Rule” and “are intended as guides to interpretation, but the text of each Rule is authoritative.” Preamble, Arizona Rules of Professional Conduct, paragraph [21]. A rule should not specifically prohibit conduct while an explanatory comment provides an exception.

II. Proposed Rule Amendment

Arizona should adopt Connecticut's simple and elegant language. ER 1.2(d)

thus should be revised as follows:

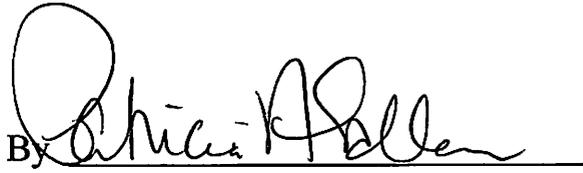

A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, but a lawyer may (1) discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client; (2) ~~and may~~ counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of the law; or (3) counsel or assist a client regarding conduct expressly permitted by Arizona law, provided that the lawyer counsels the client about the legal consequences, under other applicable law, of the client's proposed course of conduct.

With the rule amended this way, a lengthy explanatory or medical-marijuana-specific comment is unnecessary.

Conclusion

This rule-change proposal is not intended to weigh into or reignite the debate over whether medical marijuana should be allowed or continued, or whether marijuana otherwise should be decriminalized. Medical marijuana is currently permitted under state law. This proposed rule change recognizes existing reality and is offered only to provide certainty to lawyers about their proper ethical role in advising and assisting clients about activities falling within permissible state law.

OPINION NO. 11-01
(February 2011)

SUMMARY

A lawyer may ethically counsel or assist a client in legal matters expressly permissible under the Arizona Medical Marijuana Act (“Act”), despite the fact that such conduct potentially may violate applicable federal law. Lawyers may do so only if: (1) at the time the advice or assistance is provided, no court decisions have held that the provisions of the Act relating to the client’s proposed course of conduct are preempted, void or otherwise invalid; (2) the lawyer reasonably concludes that the client’s activities or proposed activities comply fully with state law requirements; and (3) the lawyer advises the client regarding possible federal law implications of the proposed conduct if the lawyer is qualified to do so, or recommends that the client seek other legal counsel regarding those issues and appropriately limits the scope of the representation.

NOTE: This opinion is limited to the specific facts discussed herein. Because the opinion is based on the Act as currently in effect, subsequent legislative or court action regarding the Act could affect the conclusions expressed herein.

FACTS

In the 2010 general election, Arizona voters approved Proposition 203, titled “Arizona Medical Marijuana Act” (“Act”), which legalized medical marijuana for use by people with certain “chronic or debilitating” diseases. The proposition amended Title 36 of the Arizona Revised Statutes by adding §§ 36-2801 through -2819 and also amended A.R.S. § 43-1201. Arizona became the 16th jurisdiction (15 states and the District of Columbia) to adopt a medical-marijuana law.

Despite the adoption of Arizona’s Act, 21 U.S.C. § 841(a)(1) of the federal Controlled Substances Act (“CSA”) continues to make the manufacture, distribution or possession with intent to distribute marijuana illegal.

Formal opinions of the Committee on the Rules of Professional Conduct are advisory in nature only and are not binding in any disciplinary or other legal proceedings. This opinion is based on the Ethical Rules in effect on the date the opinion was published. If the rule changes, a different conclusion may be appropriate.

In an October 19, 2009, memorandum (“DOJ Memorandum”), the U.S. Department of Justice advised that it would be a better use of federal resources to not prosecute under federal law patients and their caregivers who are in “clear and unambiguous compliance” with state medical-marijuana laws. The DOJ Memorandum indicates that federal prosecutors still will look at cases involving patients and caregivers, however, if they involve factors such as unlawful possession or use of a firearm, sales to minors, evidence of money-laundering activity, ties to other criminal enterprises, violence, or amounts of marijuana inconsistent with purported compliance with state or local law.

Although characterizing patients and their caregivers as low priorities, the DOJ Memorandum does not characterize commercial enterprises the same way. In fact, the DOJ Memorandum says that the “prosecution of commercial enterprises that unlawfully market and sell marijuana for profit continues to be an enforcement priority” of the DOJ.¹

The DOJ Memorandum explains that the DOJ’s position is based on “resource allocation and federal priorities” and does not “legalize” marijuana or provide a legal defense to a violation of federal law, nor is it intended to create any privileges, benefits, or rights, substantive or procedural, enforceable by any individual, party or witness in any administrative, civil, or criminal matter. Nor does clear and unambiguous compliance with state law or the absence of one or all of the above factors create a legal defense to a violation of the Controlled Substances Act. Rather, this memorandum is intended solely as a guide to the exercise of investigative and prosecutorial discretion.

QUESTION PRESENTED

May a lawyer ethically advise and assist a client with respect to activities that comply with the Act, including such matters as advising clients about the requirements of the Act, assisting clients in establishing and licensing non-profit business entities that meet the requirements of the Act, and representing clients in proceedings before state agencies regarding licensing and certification issues?

ER 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority between Client and Lawyer

- (d) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, but a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of the law.

RELEVANT ARIZONA ETHICS OPINIONS

Ariz. Ethics Ops. 86-05 (March 1986), 87-05 (February 1987), 00-04 (November 2000)

OPINION

I. Introduction

The Act’s passage gives rise to complex issues related to the proper ethical role of lawyers in advising and assisting clients about activities falling within the scope of the Act but which potentially may violate applicable federal law. Novel issues are presented regarding the relationship between Arizona’s Act and federal law prohibitions on the manufacture, distribution or possession of marijuana.²

In addition to such unresolved legal issues, the DOJ Memorandum leaves unclear the extent to which federal prosecutors will pursue violations of federal law for conduct that complies fully with Arizona’s Act and whether Arizona’s medical-marijuana law ultimately may be held to be preempted or invalid in whole or in part.

While these issues are being decided by prosecutors and courts, it is important that lawyers have the ability to counsel and assist their clients about activities that are in compliance with the Act — and traditionally at the heart of the lawyer’s role — by assisting clients in complying with the Act’s requirements through the performance of such legal services as: establishing medical-marijuana dispensaries; obtaining the necessary licensing and registrations; representing clients in proceedings before Arizona agencies responsible for implementing the Act; and representing governmental entities to draft rules and regulations or otherwise counsel the governmental entity with respect to its rights and obligations under and concerning the Act.

² For example, the United States Supreme Court has held that the CSA does not establish an implied medical-necessity exception to prohibitions on manufacture and distribution of marijuana. See United States v. Oakland Cannabis Buyers’ Cooperative, 532 U.S. 483 (2001). California has held that the state’s medical-marijuana law is not preempted by the CSA because there is “no positive conflict” in that the state law does not require activities in violation of federal law. In so holding, the California court noted that “governmental entities do not incur aider and abettor or direct liability by complying with their obligations under the state medical marijuana laws.” See Qualified Patients Ass’n v. City of Anaheim, 187 Cal. App. 4th 734, 759-60, 115 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89, 107-08 (2010), review denied Dec. 1, 2010.

II. Ethical Rule (ER) 1.2(d) and Prior Ethics Opinions and Court Decisions

Although Arizona's medical-marijuana law is new, it raises a timeless issue for lawyers: whether the client is seeking the lawyer's help to engage in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent. As one treatise explains, Model Rule (MR) 1.2(d), which mirrors Arizona's ER 1.2(d), states the dividing line as follows:

[W]hile a lawyer may discuss, explain, and predict the consequences of proposed conduct that would constitute crime or fraud, a lawyer may not counsel or assist in such conduct. Rule 1.2(d) is thus the close relative – in the disciplinary context – of the criminal law of aiding and abetting, and the civil law of joint tortfeasance. As is the case in those other forms of accessorial liability, however, the principle of Rule 1.2(d) is much easier to state than to apply.

Geoffrey C. Hazard Jr. and W. William Hodes, The Law of Lawyering § 5.12 at 5-37, 5-38 (3d ed. 2005).

Comment 10 to ER 1.2 emphasizes that a lawyer is not for hire as an accomplice or enabler of criminal conduct:

Paragraph (d) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly counseling or assisting a client to commit a crime or fraud. This prohibition, however, does not preclude the lawyer from giving an honest opinion about the actual consequences that appear likely to result from a client's conduct. Nor does the fact that a client uses advice in a course of action that is criminal or fraudulent of itself make a lawyer a party to the course of action. There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which a crime or fraud might be committed with impunity.

These principles have been applied in three prior Arizona ethics opinions and in Arizona disciplinary cases, which have addressed the issue of whether the lawyer could affirmatively counsel or recommend conduct by the client that the lawyer knew was criminal or fraudulent.

The first two ethics opinions addressed whether a lawyer may advise a client to refuse to submit to blood, breath or urine tests upon being arrested for driving while intoxicated. Ariz. Ethics Ops. 86-05 (March 1986), 87-05 (February 1987). Opinion 86-05 concluded that, based on the then-state of the law, a lawyer could not advise a client to refuse to submit to a test upon being arrested for DUI, but could discuss the consequences of refusal without actually counseling refusal. When a new appellate opinion on the subject changed the law several months later, the Committee reconsidered Op. 86-05 and issued Op. 87-05, which concluded that a lawyer could ethically advise a client to refuse to undergo blood, breath or urine tests.³

³ The Committee does not express any opinion here as to whether the conclusions reached in Op. 86-05 or Op. 87-05 are still valid in light of Carrillo v. Houser, 224 Ariz. 463, 232 P.3d 1245 (2010), which held that the DUI implied-

In discussing ER 1.2(d) under the then-state of the law, Op. 86-05 concluded:

It is one thing to tell a client that proposed conduct may violate the antitrust laws, for example. It is quite another to advise the client affirmatively to undertake such conduct. ER 1.2(d), recognizing the distinction, explicitly forbids a lawyer to “counsel a client to engage... in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent.” Neither “criminal” nor “fraudulent” is explicitly defined in either the Rule or the accompanying Comment.

Similarly, the third opinion addressed whether a lawyer may ethically advise a client that the client may record telephone conversations between the client’s children and the client’s former spouse without the former spouse’s knowledge and consent. Ariz. Ethics Op. 00-04 (November 2000). In Op. 00-04, the answer to whether a lawyer could ethically advise a client to record a telephone call hinged on the answer to the basic question of whether the client’s proposed conduct would be “illegal under federal or state law.” If so, “then the inquiring attorney may not, under ER 1.2(d), advise the client to tape record telephone conversations between the client’s children and the client’s former spouse.”

Arizona lawyer-discipline cases demonstrate that ER 1.2(d) (or its predecessor, DR 7-102(A)(7), which contained generally the same language⁴) has been applied to sanction lawyers who affirmatively counseled their clients to engage in conduct that was knowingly fraudulent or otherwise in violation of state law, but not in a conflict-of-laws circumstance. E.g., In re Burns, 139 Ariz. 487, 679 P.2d 510 (1984) (by urging his client to take settlement funds and not pay an Air Force lien for medical services, lawyer “encouraged his client to commit fraud on the United States government”); In re Nulle, 127 Ariz. 299, 620 P.2d 214 (1980) (lawyer violated DR 7-102(A)(7) by effectively advising corporate client’s president to falsely represent himself as the sole owner on a liquor-license application thus violating state law).

III. Medical Marijuana Laws in Other Jurisdictions

Of the other jurisdictions that have legalized medical marijuana⁵, it appears that only Maine has addressed the intersection of state-authorized medical marijuana and legal ethics.⁶ In Maine Op.

consent statute does not generally authorize law enforcement to administer a test to determine alcohol concentration without a warrant, unless the arrestee expressly agrees to the test.

⁵ Alaska, California, Colorado, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Maine, Michigan, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont and Washington. Medical Marijuana, 15 Legal Medical Marijuana States and DC, Laws, Fees, and Possession Limits, <http://medicalmarijuana.procon.org> (last visited Feb. 15, 2011).

199 (July 7, 2010), the Professional Ethics Commission of the Maine Bar Board of Overseers also warned lawyers about this issue. Maine's version of ER 1.2(d) is the same as Arizona's, except for one word immaterial to this analysis.⁷

Maine concluded:

Maine and its sister states may well be in the vanguard regarding the medicinal use and effectiveness of marijuana. However, the Rule which governs attorney conduct does not make a distinction between crimes which are enforced and those which are not. So long as both the federal law and the language of the Rule each remain the same, an attorney needs to perform the analysis required by the Rule and determine whether the particular legal service being requested rises to the level of assistance in violating federal law.

IV. Analysis

As noted above, no prior Arizona ethics opinions or cases have addressed the novel issue presented by the adoption of the Act — whether a lawyer may ethically “counsel” or “assist” a client under the following conditions: (1) the client’s conduct complies with a state statute expressly authorizing the conduct at issue; (2) the conduct may nonetheless violate federal law; (3) the federal government has issued a formal “memorandum” that essentially carves out a safe harbor for conduct that is in “clear and unambiguous compliance” with state law, at least so long as other factors are not present (such as unlawful firearm use, or “for profit” commercial sales); and (4) no court opinion has held that the state law is invalid or unenforceable on federal preemption grounds.

In these circumstances, we decline to interpret and apply ER 1.2(d) in a manner that would prevent a lawyer who concludes that the client’s proposed conduct is in “clear and unambiguous compliance” with state law from assisting the client in connection with activities expressly authorized under state law, thereby depriving clients of the very legal advice and assistance that is needed to engage in the conduct that the state law expressly permits. The maintenance of an independent legal profession, and of its right to advocate for the interests of clients, is a bulwark of our system of government. History is replete with examples of lawyers who, through vigorous advocacy and at great personal and professional cost to themselves, obtained the vindication of constitutional or other rights long denied or withheld and which otherwise could not have been secured.

A state law now expressly permits certain conduct. Legal services are necessary or desirable to implement and bring to fruition that conduct expressly permitted under state law. In any potential conflict between state and federal authority, such as may be presented by the interplay

1.2(c), Oregon Rules of Professional Conduct, is identical to ER 1.2(d) except that Oregon prohibits a lawyer counseling a client to engage or assist to engage in conduct the lawyer knows is “illegal or fraudulent,” rather than “criminal or fraudulent.”

between the Act and federal law, lawyers have a critical role to perform in the activities that will lead to the proper resolution of the controversy. Although the Act may be found to be preempted by federal law or otherwise invalid, as of this time there has been no such judicial determination.

Accordingly, we believe the following is a reasonable construction of ER 1.2(d)'s prohibitions in the unique circumstances presented by Arizona's adoption of the Act:

- If a client or potential client requests an Arizona lawyer's assistance to undertake the specific actions that the Act expressly permits; and
- The lawyer advises the client with respect to the potential federal law implications and consequences thereof or, if the lawyer is not qualified to do so, advises the client to seek other legal counsel regarding those issues and limits the scope of his or her representation; and
- The client, having received full disclosure of the risks of proceeding under the state law, wishes to proceed with a course of action specifically authorized by the Act; then
- The lawyer ethically may perform such legal acts as are necessary or desirable to assist the client to engage in the conduct that is expressly permissible under the Act.

This opinion and its construction of ER 1.2(d) are strictly limited to the unusual circumstances occasioned by the adoption of the Act. Any judicial determination regarding the law, a change in the Act or in the federal government's enforcement policies could affect this conclusion. The Committee cannot render opinions based on pure questions of law or on questions involving solely the lawyer's exercise of judgment or discretion. Committee on the Rules of Professional Conduct Statement of Jurisdiction § 9(a), (c). This opinion does not address whether specific conduct is preempted by federal law; whether the Act is or is not available to the client as a defense for a violation of federal law; or whether the lawyer's assistance to the client may expose the lawyer to criminal prosecution under federal law.

CONCLUSION

Lawyers may ethically advise clients about complying with the Arizona Medical Marijuana Act, including advising them about compliance with Arizona law, assisting them to establish business entities, and formally representing clients before a governmental agency regarding licensing and certification issues, but only in the narrow circumstances set forth in this opinion and only if lawyers strictly adhere to those requirements.
